Archival Visual Resources in the Interdisciplinary Classroom: Strategies for Successful Partnerships — Jillian Ewalt, Librarian/Archivist, University of Dayton

Librarians and archivists can develop successful partnerships that support curricular integration of visual resources, especially in an interdisciplinary undergraduate curriculum. Using a case study as the basis for this conversation, the poster outlines a recent exhibit of controversial archival photographs and how the university library partnered with faculty to use it as an interdisciplinary teaching tool. This poster provides a forum for discussing challenges, opportunities, and practical issues related to integrating archival visual resources into the curriculum and strategies for developing successful partnerships across campus that leverage visual resource collections.
